An IoT system consists of many communicating 'things' which in turn, consist of sensors (with or without processing capacity) communicating via a network. Examples of things could be, building sensors to monitor air quality, water level, temperature, air conditioning, light, fire, gas, security sensors, cameras, utilities sensors etc. A 'thing' could be anything that can connect to the Internet, through a network, and communicate with other systems. Often, one 'thing' connects to another 'thing' via another network, to form a larger group or community. For example, a piece of software is communicating with many sensors, appliances, heating and cooling, utilities etc. All things communicate with other things through the internet via a gateway that connects the things to the internet. IoT applications vary in nature and have a large potential in multiple industries such as Transportation, Manufacturing, Energy, Health, Automotive, Telecom, and more. What does ThingSpeak do? ThingSpeak is an open source IoT platform that is intended to work across multiple things and enable things to communicate to each other. By connecting things and enabling them to communicate to each other, we can build a large IoT system. By doing this, we can build a system that has the ability to communicate and change over time. Gardening My gardening experience on ThingSpeak started with my annuals. I am very interested in growing annuals and would like to make my garden a cut flower show.
